Breaking New Ground

CHAPMAN CENTER WILL TRAIN STUDENTS TO IMPACT THE WORLD FOR CHRIST (Page 14)
Dear friends,

Have you ever prayed for something and then were amazed when God answered far beyond all that you asked or thought possible? One of our earnest prayers was answered recently when alumnus Dr. Gary Chapman ’58 gave a cornerstone gift toward a new building on the Chicago campus, one that will house a global media center and counseling facilities. What an awe-inspiring blessing!

As alumni, we too can bless the next generation of Christian leaders being trained at Moody—through our prayers and our giving. One project that needs our support is the completion of Culbertson Hall renovations, which will provide much-needed student space for studying, fellowship, and prayer. (See page 4 for details of this alumni campaign.)

You’ll find more amazing stories in this issue, such as the faith-filled response of two alumni whose mother was stricken by Ebola and how Moody Radio drew hundreds to pray for revival in the public square.

How has God answered your earnest prayers lately? Contact us with your stories at mbialum@moody.edu or 312-329-4412. We want to hear what God is doing in your life.

Serving Christ together,

Nancy K. Hastings

Alumni Project: Enhancing Student Space

Remember the deep, lifelong friendships you formed as a Moody student? Providing ample gathering space on campus for students to study, talk, eat, and pray together is vital for fostering an environment where godly relationships can thrive. Now you can help support the next generation of ministry leaders through a much-needed renovation of Culbertson Hall.

Phase one is already complete: The second floor, informally known as Culby 2, is home to Moody Central, a one-stop services center where students can get questions answered and issues resolved concerning academics, billing, registration, Practical Christian Ministry assignments, and other matters.

Phase two involves the renovation of the first floor, Culby 1. The porch has been enclosed, which dramatically enlarged the available space on the first floor. In addition to providing more student space for fellowship and study, plans for Culby 1 include a snack bar with upscale vending and a laptop counter, fireplaces and furniture, offices for Resident Supervisors, and computers with a printer. The Broman Chapel (named after A. Franklin Broman, dean of men from 1937 to 1965) will also be relocated there, as well as four huddle rooms and five prayer closets. The Culby 1 renovations will replace student space now occupied by Moody Central.

In a recent survey, Moody’s student satisfaction scores saw “significant improvement” due to the addition of Moody Central, says Greg Gaertner, Moody’s institutional researcher. The Culbertson 1 renovations are expected to have a similar result.

“As alumni know what it’s like to want to have places on campus that are nice and homey where they can socialize with their friends or study,” says Tim Arens, dean of students for the last 30 years and a member of the renovation planning committee. Culbertson Hall, a 19-story men’s residence hall, has been occupied since 1970, yet the first two floors have never been renovated. Arens says the goal is to have renovations completed by spring semester 2015, yet funds are still needed.

As a Moody alumnus, will you consider a gift to help finish this project? “Alumni have already given $383,000 toward the AdvanceGlobal campaign (see article on page 14), $93,000 of which is designated for the Culbertson Hall renovations. In addition, a cornerstone gift was provided by alumnus Dr. Gary Chapman ’58 and his wife, Karolyn, for the Chapman Center. The balance needed for the Culbertson first floor renovations is about $850,000. To give a gift, please visit www.moodyglobal.org/giving/culbertsonrenovation or call (800) DL MOODY.
Cast Your Vote for the 2015 Alumni Board Nominees

Each year, alumni have the opportunity to vote on nominees for the Alumni Board of Directors. The Board, which meets twice annually, serves as a representative voice for the more than 41,000 living alumni of Moody Bible Institute and Moody Theological Seminary. Read about the new members who are up for consideration in 2015, then cast your vote to approve or disapprove each one on the enclosed ballot card. Mail it to the Alumni Association.

New Members

Julie [Carlen ‘80] Ross studied Foreign Missions while at Moody. She served with her husband, Steve Ross ‘79 MA ’91, youth/college pastor at Boca Raton Community Church in Boca Raton, Florida, for six years. Then God called them to Peru, South America, where they served for eight years. After Steve completed his master’s degree from Moody, they began a ministry called The King’s Wings. Through this ministry, they trained pastors in Peru and served the missionaries in the Bahamian Islands until a tragic accident took Steve’s life in 2003. Steve was killed in a mid-air collision during a return flight from the Bahamas, where he had delivered supplies to an orphanage.

Julie was left to raise their four children as a single mother. Julie’s oldest daughter, Ashley Ross BA ’06, teaches third grade at Boca Raton Christian School, a ministry of Boca Raton Community Church. Her two sons are married, and her youngest daughter graduated from high school in June 2014. Julie is involved as a volunteer at the school and her church.

Tracy [McPhail] Reed ’14, and her husband, Ian, are newlyweds residing in Tampa, Florida, where she is active in her church as a Sunday school teacher and new member orientation leader. She volunteers as a “big sister” with Big Brothers Big Sisters of Tampa Bay and also served on its executive board for five years. She won Big Sister of the Year award in 2014 for Tampa Bay.

Tracy received her bachelor’s degree from Spelman College followed by her master’s degree and PhD in industrial/organizational psychology from the University of South Florida. Tracy received a Certificate in Biblical Studies this past May through Moody Bible Institute Distance Learning and is continuing her studies with Moody Theological Seminary. She looks forward to using her Moody education in her future ministry endeavors.

Chris Drombetta MA ’14 was working in business management at a large teleservices firm in Akron, Ohio, when he began studying at Moody Bible Institute Distance Learning. He earned his master’s degree in Ministry Leadership with a Preaching Concentration, graduating with highest honors.

Today Chris is the executive pastor of Old North Church in Canfield, Ohio. He is responsible for overseeing the staff, finances, and facilities. He also preaches once a month in the church’s primary worship gatherings. Outside of the local church, Chris serves on the Advisory Board of the C.S. Lewis Institute (Northeast Ohio chapter) and contributes to the online disciple-making forum, gotherefor.com. He is also pursuing a Master of Theological Studies degree from Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary.

Chris is married to Sarah, and together they have two children, Emma and Topher. In his leisure time, Chris enjoys cooking with Sarah, playing with his children, fitness, and a good theology book over coffee.

Leaving the Board

Janet (Thrall ’78) Funderburk resides in Austin, Texas, with her husband, Richard, of 27 years. After graduating from Moody, Janet attended John Brown University in Siloam Springs, Arkansas, completing bachelor’s degrees in vocal performance, Christian education, and music education.

Janet has worked as a legal secretary and music teacher. She sang with the Austin Lyric Opera Chorus for five years and occasionally performs for various events, retreats, and conferences. She is also an avid pianist.

Janet has served on the boards of the Christian Women’s Club and Camp Peniel, a Christian camp in Marble Falls, Texas. Janet is also involved in the justice ministry at her church.

Myrna (Kinlaw ’68) White has enjoyed a long career in music, singing for Word of Life and other organizations, with the Discovery Singers on the nationally televised program Day of Discovery and on The Moody Church broadcast Songs in the Night. Myrna has performed in conferences and concerts throughout the United States and on local television and radio programs.

Myrna and her husband, Phil, will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary in June 2015. They have three grown daughters and five grandchildren.

Ed Reese ’50 is a native of Grand Rapids, Michigan, and has spent a lifetime in Christian service, serving with Youth for Christ, World Literature Crusade, Christian Aid Mission, Second Coming, and Jack Van Impe Ministries, as well as pastoring two churches.

He taught at Hyles-Anderson College in Crown Pointe, Indiana, for 13 years and at Crown College in Powell, Tennessee, for the last 17 years.

Ed also developed and published The Reese Chronological Bible and the Reese Encyclopedia of Christian Biographies.

He and his wife, Margaret, have been married more than 56 years and have five children.

The Alumni Association thanks the retiring board members for their years of faithful service.
Running the Race: Founder’s Week 2015

Moody Bible Institute Founder’s Week, February 2–6, 2015, is fast approaching, and with it your opportunity to enjoy life-transforming Bible teaching, worship, and the camaraderie of other alumni. This year’s inspiring theme is “Running the Race,” based on Hebrews 12:1: “Let us run with endurance the race that has been set before us.”

Free and open to the public, the conference features prominent Christian teachers and leaders such as Moody President Paul Nyquist, Josh McDowell, Billy Kim, and David Jeremiah. Worship will be led by singer-songwriter Sarah Groves, Rend Collective, and Moody’s student music ensembles.

The Women’s Concert Choir reunion singers will celebrate the choir’s 60th anniversary by performing three pieces during the Tuesday evening service at The Moody Church in Chicago. Former members are invited to sing with the choir. Contact Betty-Ann Lynerd or Mishelle Cipriani at wcc60threunion@moody.edu, or visit their Facebook page at WCC 60th Reunion.

Connect with former classmates at Monday’s reunion dinners (classes of ’65, ’75, ’90, and ’05) and Tuesday’s Alumni Banquet (open to all alumni). For ticket information, see your Alumni Activities brochure or call (312) 329-4412.

If you can’t join us in person, we invite you to watch conference sessions live online at www.foundersweek.org or listen on your local Moody Radio station. If you miss a session or want to watch or hear it again later, audio and video conference sessions will be available online after the conference ends.

Consider a few of Moody’s own graduates who will speak on Tuesday, Alumni Day:

Dr. Mike Fabarez BA ’85, founding pastor of Compass Bible Church in Aliso Viejo, California, has served in pastoral ministry for more than 25 years. He also communicates the truth of God’s Word on hundreds of radio stations through his daily broadcast, Focal Point. He has written several books, including Why the Bible? and his latest, Lifelines for Tough Times (Harvest House, 2014), about his journey of raising a physically disabled daughter. Dr. Fabarez is a graduate of Moody Bible Institute, Talbot School of Theology, and Westminster Seminary California. He and his wife, Carlynn (Dick BA ’89), have three children.

Ron Hutchcraft ’65 is a veteran of more than 40 years in youth and family work and president of Ron Hutchcraft Ministries. He holds city-wide evangelistic outreaches and hosts the popular radio broadcasts A Word With You and Call to Greatness. He also founded On Eagles’ Wings, an outreach to Native Americans. Ron has written several books, including The Battle for a Generation and A Life That Matters (Moody Publishers). In 1997, he was honored as Moody Bible Institute’s Alumnus of the Year. He and his wife, Karen, have three children and nine grandchildren.
Bryan Clark ’80 has been pastor of Lincoln Berean Church, Lincoln, Nebraska, since 1994. Previously he served as senior pastor and youth pastor at the Berean Church in Broken Bow, Nebraska. Pastor Clark graduated from Moody Bible Institute, received his master’s degree in Christian education from Talbot Theological Seminary and his master of divinity equivalency and doctorate of ministry degree from Denver Seminary. Bryan and his wife, Patti, have been married since 1981 and have three daughters.

The Moody Music Faculty Can Moo. Can You?

When guests arrived for the Moody Music department’s first recital of the fall semester, they expected to hear Dr. Desirée Hassler, who joined the full-time faculty this summer. Perhaps her reputation as a soprano with the Chicago Lyric Opera put everyone into a certain frame of mind, but all of that went straight out the window when she started mooing like a cow. Loudly. And in tune.

Hassler’s concert, “Songs, Rhymes, and Lullabies,” featured piano accompaniments by Chris Wheeler ’12, plus a new song written by Dan Mattix ’06. That’s how the cow sounds got started—he composed a musical setting for “Mr. Brown Can Moo, Can You?” from the well-known children’s book by Dr. Seuss.

Mattix offers a quick explanation: “The song was inspired by Chris’s two-year-old daughter, Nadia, who loves the book. My daughter, Clara, loves it, too, and I dedicated the song to her when I wrote it. The girls are friends and often play together.”

When Dr. Hassler planned her recital program of children’s songs, she chose standard literature like Leonard Bernstein’s “I Hate Music” cycle, Samuel Barber’s “Knoxville, Summer of 1915,” and a few familiar lullabies.

“The new song fits nicely into the children’s music theme of the concert,” Mattix says. “And then Desirée started doing these sound effects….”

“I’ve been heavily coached in my barnyard voices,” Dr. Hassler interjects. “I’m a city girl, so I had a lot of help from these two guys.”

“It’s the most fun I’ve had in a long time on the concert stage,” Hassler says. She earned her Doctor of Musical Arts from the University of Illinois before moving to Chicago to join the full-time chorus at the Lyric Opera. She and her husband, Dan, have four children and are putting down roots in Chicago.

“If I pursued a solo singing career, and I really made it, I’d be in Europe 12 weeks at a time. Dan and I have never been called to that life,” she says. “I’m happy to be in one place.”

She hears “the opera question” fairly often. An opera singer? In church?

“People ask me this a lot—You’re a classical singer, do you ever sing Chris Tomlin? And the answer is, ‘Yes, I do.’”

“In the music department we use classical music as a foundation, as a starting point for whatever the student wants to learn,” Hassler says. “Of my 16 studio students at Moody, maybe only three get jazzed about opera singing. You have to study core repertoire, but you also must be diverse, using whatever excites your students. I have a student from Zimbabwe who loves leading worship, and he writes a lot of original compositions, so that’s what we work on in his lessons. I’m tailoring my lessons to their own growth and their own ideals for their ministry and career.”

Dan Mattix is one example of this richly diverse Moody education. After graduating in 2006, he earned an MMus from the University of Iowa, where he studied piano, choral conducting, and singing. In addition to teaching on Moody’s adjunct faculty, he also serves as music director at Western Springs Christian Reformed Church and owns a music studio with his wife, Katie [Brestel ’08]. In addition to the recent children’s song he wrote, he also composes choral and orchestral music.

“I think Moody prepared me very well,” Mattix says. “I was looking for a place where I could have very good musical training but also a heart for ministry. Everywhere else I visited, I was finding one or the other, but not both. Moody gives you the tools you need so you can apply them in different ways in many different ministries.”

Dr. Desirée Hassler, soprano, joined the Moody Music department this summer.
Moody Receives Four-Star Charity Rating

Moody Global Ministries has been named a four-star charity by Charity Navigator, America’s largest and most utilized independent evaluator of charities. Only a quarter of the charities they’ve evaluated have ever received a four-star rating, the highest available.

In his congratulatory letter Charity Navigator’s president and CEO, Ken Berger, noted that Moody received the rating because it “adheres to good governance and other best practices that minimize the chance of unethical activities and consistently executes its mission in a fiscally responsible way.”

Dr. Paul Nyquist, Moody’s president, said, “We are honored to receive the four-star rating. This builds further confidence in the hearts and minds of our generous financial partners that we are steadfast in our commitment to sound, biblical stewardship of the resources entrusted to us.”

Forbes, Business Week, and Kiplinger’s Personal Finance have all profiled and commended Charity Navigator’s unique method of applying data-driven analysis to the charitable sector. Charity Navigator rated Moody by evaluating financial health, accountability, and transparency.

Through its ratings Charity Navigator’s purpose is to “show givers how efficiently [they] believe a charity will use their support today, how well it has sustained its programs and services over time, and their level of commitment to being accountable and transparent.”

“For more than 128 years Moody has been equipping people with the truth of God’s Word,” added Dr. Nyquist, “and we will continue to carry out this mission around the globe in a way that is God-honoring and faithful to His Word.”

New Moody Radio App for Smart Phone, Tablets

Moody Radio launched an update to its apps in September that works on smart phones and on iPad and Android tablets.

“It’s a complete redo from the previous version, so it has a totally different look and feel,” says David Quigley ’08, product manager at Moody.

The app’s fresh look and effortless navigation will make it even easier to listen to biblical programming on Moody Radio’s 36 owned and operated stations as well as Moody’s Internet stations such as Proclaim! and Urban Praise.

The Moody Radio iPhone and iPad apps are available as free downloads from the iTunes Store. The app for Android phones and tablets is free from the Google Play store or Amazon App store. For more information, visit moodyradio.org/mobile.
Music Ensembles Plan Ministry Tours

Do you want to be uplifted spiritually? Make plans to attend a concert by one of Moody’s four music ensembles as they travel to a church near you.

The students will tour January 16–18 and March 8–18, 2015. While most colleges offer just one week for spring break, Moody extends the break to two weeks so that students have more time to travel on mission trips and with music ensembles around the nation and the world. This spring, Moody’s four music ensembles will minister in different regions of the U.S. as well as El Salvador.

Alumni Association Connects with Students

On the last Friday of September since 2009, Moody Alumni Association board members have been connecting with undergraduate students on Chicago’s campus in a tangible way. Besides sponsoring Worship on the Plaza, they hand out mugs with the Alumni Association name, logo, and class years.

“We want to build awareness of the Alumni Association within the student body. We want them to know us and build a relationship with us before they graduate,” says Nancy (Andersen ‘80) Hastings, executive director of the Alumni Association.

The mugs are a gift to remind students that their connection to Moody does not end at graduation. The Alumni Association provides services to encourage alumni, such as Moody Alumni News, alumni gatherings and class reunions, career development, and ministry awards. The association also represents alumni interests to the leadership and staff of Moody, and represents Moody’s interests and events to alumni.

Tobias Brown ’05, an alumni board member since 2012, enjoys coming back to the Moody campus twice a year to take part in board meetings, participate in events like Founder’s Week and Worship on the Plaza with the class mug giveaway, and “hang out with students.”

He encourages students to remain involved in the life and culture of Moody after they graduate. “It shows an appreciation for what they’ve learned here and for what Moody means to them and for what Moody means to the world,” he says.

Tracy Jackson, a senior pre-counseling major, class of 2015, says she appreciates the Alumni Association’s efforts to reach out to students. “It’s an incentive for the students to then become the alumni that reach out.”

Another student, Daniel Van Camp, a senior in the five-year BA/MA pastoral program, enjoyed the event and looks forward to being an active Moody alumnus after graduation. “I’ve grown at Moody,” he says. “I hope to give as I’ve received here, whether that’s through prayer, visiting, or financial support.”

Worship on the Plaza is an annual outdoor chapel featuring the student-led Voices of Praise gospel choir. Freshmen receive a guide to Chicago’s churches, restaurants, shops, and other attractions. Earlier in the week, alumni Peter Grant ’83 of Prevision Partnership and Alex McLellan ’96 of Reason Why International spoke in chapel. Students at Moody Theological Seminary in Chicago received mugs after their chapel the following Wednesday. Mugs were shipped to the Michigan and Spokane campuses for distribution to students.

In a campus-wide meeting on September 16, Dr. Paul Nyquist announced plans to construct a new building on Moody’s Chicago campus, providing space for a global media center and expanded facilities for counseling ministries. The new building will be called the Chapman Center, named for Gary and Karolyn Chapman ’58, who have given a generous gift toward the project.

“Today I have the privilege of announcing the construction of the first major building on this campus in 20 years,” Nyquist said, greeted by prolonged cheers from the students, faculty, and staff gathered in Torrey-Gray Auditorium. The announcement was made via live webcast for campuses in Spokane, Wash., and Plymouth, Mich., and Moody Radio stations around the country.

“The Chapman Center will help propel Moody into an unprecedented expansion of education, radio, and publishing ministry in our 129-year history,” Dr. Nyquist said. “The Chapman Center will build on the Chapmans’ legacy in marriage and family, as well as media and conference ministry. We are extremely grateful for the Chapmans’ gift, along with the gifts and prayers of many others toward this effort, which will result in an unparalleled number of people here and around the globe being reached with Christ’s message of hope.”
A proposal calls for a four-story, 50,000-square-foot building constructed on open land north of the Sweeting Center, and will include space for several initiatives:

- The Global Media Center with facilities for Moody Radio and Moody Publishers to collaborate using emerging technologies. The center will also provide a hands-on laboratory for training Moody students to use real-world media skills in ministry around the world.

- The Moody Theological Seminary Counseling Clinic and Study Center with a private entrance for clients, allowing Moody to offer city counseling services while also providing valuable practicum experience for counseling students.

- The Gary D. Chapman Library and Exhibit with a collection of Dr. Chapman’s works and counseling resources, as well as an interactive multimedia exhibit celebrating Dr. Chapman’s work and ministry.

- Office space for the Gary D. Chapman Chair for Marriage and Family, enabling the counseling clinic, Moody Publishers, and Moody Radio to work closely with Dr. John Trent, who was appointed as the endowed chair earlier this year.
Moody planners had previously investigated two other campus sites for a proposed building, either a new building east of the Moon building on Wells St., or a renovation of existing warehouse space previously used by Moody Publishers. Neither site proved ideal, leading to the announced plan of a building that connects directly to the classroom space in the Sweeting Center.

A construction timetable for the Chapman Center is currently being developed, with more information to be announced in 2015.

“By bringing together the best of what Moody does, in one building, the Chapman Center will enable us to further our vision of communicating God’s Word in life-changing ways across the globe, cultures, and generations.”

—Dr. Paul Nyquist, Moody president

The new building is part of Moody’s AdvanceGlobal campaign, a capital funding project. With the recent Chapman commitment, the project has now raised gifts of $28 million toward a goal of $35 million. In addition to the announced building project, the campaign funds international student scholarships and renovations to Culbertson Hall (see story on page 4).

Moody announced this project at the time when Chicago’s Near North neighborhood is in the middle of a real estate boom. A local developer is currently constructing a 33-story residential building on LaSalle Blvd., directly across the street from Houghton Hall. Another developer plans to raze the Howard Johnson motel just south of campus, replacing it with a 35-story tower. And yet another 41-story apartment building is planned for the corner of Wells and Ontario, a site beloved by Moody students as the former Gino’s East property (and before that, Planet Hollywood).

These trends may surprise alumni who have not visited the Chicago campus for some time. After a decade of economic expansion, the Near North neighborhood has the highest apartment prices in Chicago, with a one-bedroom rental costing more than $2,000 a month. As a result, Moody continues to develop ministry strategies in response to the changing neighborhood.

Moody has owned property at this location since 1889, the same spot where D. L. Moody once kneeled in prayer, asking God to give him land for a Bible training school. Now the Chicago campus comprises 16 major buildings on 23 acres.

“By bringing together the best of what Moody does, in one building, the Chapman Center will enable us to further our vision of communicating God’s Word in life-changing ways across the globe, cultures, and generations,” said Dr. Paul Nyquist, Moody president. “Our vision for development on the Chicago campus is not focused on newer, taller, or more expensive buildings, but rather on creating strategic and forward-thinking ways to impact the world for Christ. This is an exciting time for Moody!”
As Dr. Gary Chapman ’58 looked out a window overlooking Moody’s Chicago campus during a recent visit, he considered how he could help launch the next generation of ministry leaders. He and his wife, Karolyn, made a bold decision. They would give toward a center for marriage and family ministry. >>
“My life is very entwined with what God has done here at Moody,” Chapman says, offering some background to the generous gift that will help fund construction of the new building.

Addressing the Moody family just after the project was announced, Chapman reflected on his campus arrival 60 years earlier. He grew up in China Grove, a North Carolina mill town with a population of 2,000. After a high school classmate showed him a Moody Bible Institute catalog, he took the long bus ride north, hailed his first taxi, and walked through the giant arch. He was 17 years old, and all his possessions fit into the two suitcases he carried.

“My own life has been deeply impacted by Moody Bible Institute,” Chapman says now. “It was here in the classrooms where I was challenged to dig into the Scriptures in a way I had never done before. It was here where I learned to have a daily quiet time with God.”

“It was here that I got a vision for the world and a desire to be a missionary,” he adds. At Moody, he had been president of Moody’s Missionary Union, and after he married Karolyn, they planned for a career of missionary service. Health problems intervened, redirecting the Chapmans to church ministry, but their missionary vision was not lost.

While serving as associate pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in Winston-Salem, N.C., Chapman developed resources for marriage counseling. He had noticed how the same communication problems would crop up, time after time, with the couples he counseled. His observations led to Moody Publisher’s 1995 release of The Five Love Languages: How to Express Heartfelt Commitment to Your Mate.

“Now my books are all over the world in 50 languages, so I guess I am a missionary,” Chapman says, concluding... a biographical summary that modestly leaves out a few details—how his book has sold 9.5 million copies, landing on the New York Times best seller list for 380 weeks, and how he published 40 other books and media projects. (He credits Karolyn, a college English major, for helping him prepare a steady stream of manuscripts).

“Now my books are all over the world in 50 languages, so I guess I am a missionary.”

—Dr. Gary Chapman

Casual observers immediately note how Chapman underplays his success. Even after he became a media juggernaut—even after helping Oprah and Katie find their love languages—he’s still the same guy who at graduation signed his Moody yearbook with Galatians 6:14: “But God forbid that I should boast except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ.”

A few weeks before the Chapman Center project was announced, Gary and Karolyn had visited Moody’s Chicago campus while considering the proposed project. That morning he read the next verses in his well-worn travel Bible, coming to Psalm 71:17–18: “O God, You have taught me from my youth; And to this day I declare Your wondrous works. Now also when I am old and grayheaded, O God, do not forsake me, Until I declare Your strength to this generation.”

The verses would fuel the Chapmans’ decision-making process, kindled by memories of the Chicago campus, the many graduates Moody has sent into ministry…and that boy who once arrived with two suitcases.

“God still has a place and God still has a people, and we are glad we have a chance to be a part of it,” Chapman concludes. “We’re deeply grateful that we have an opportunity to develop that place, and that all of you at Moody have a chance to continue this ministry.”

Gary Chapman and his wife, Karolyn, address Moody students, faculty, and staff at the announcement of the Chapman Center project.
On July 26, 2014, alumni Jeremy ’01 and Brian ’05 Writebol received an uncharacteristic three-way call from their dad in Liberia—and some bad news: “Your mom has Ebola.”
They were well aware that their 59-year-old mother could die from the deadly virus, which has caused the deaths of about 50 percent of Ebola patients. Yet their response to the news was not fear or panic, but trust in God as they prayed together before ending the phone call. “We really put the whole situation in the Lord’s hands because He’s the One ultimately in control of it,” says Brian, an aviation maintenance instructor for Moody Bible Institute in Spokane.

Jeremy, who lives in Wichita, Kan., says he drew strength from a central truth that was imparted to him at Moody: “Christ suffered and died for our sin, and as Christians, we will suffer for the sake of the gospel.”

Nancy and David Writebol, missionaries with SIM USA, were both serving at a mission hospital in the densely-populated capital city of Monrovia when the Ebola virus broke out. Nancy’s duties included helping doctors and nurses put on protective gear before they entered the Ebola ward and disinfecting them when they came out. Despite precautions, Nancy and another missionary coworker, Dr. Kent Brantly, contracted the virus in July. Both were eventually given an experimental drug and airlifted to Atlanta, where they were treated in an isolation unit at Emory University Hospital. Nearly two weeks later, David also arrived, grateful to see his wife again, albeit through the glass window of an observation room.

Faith, Not Fear
The Writebol sons visited their mom on August 6, soon after she’d been brought into the hospital on a stretcher. Brian came across an encouraging Bible verse and read it to his mom: “Be strong and courageous. Do not be in fear or dread of them for it is the Lord who goes before you” (Deut. 31:6).

Like her family, Nancy’s response after the diagnosis and throughout the dark days of her illness was one of faith. “Of course I knew what the outcome could be, and yet there was no fear,” she said at the U.S. headquarters of SIM after being discharged from the hospital free of the virus. “There was just this sense of the Lord’s peace and presence…and I thought, whether I live or whether I die, it’s going to be okay. It’s going to be okay.”

The Writebols’ humble acceptance and demonstration of faith impressed reporters, including NBC’s Matt Lauer and CNN’s Anderson Cooper. In an interview on August 22 with Jeremy, Cooper asked him whether his mom’s Ebola illness strengthened her faith. Jeremy said yes. He explained that when his mom was put on the plane to come to the U.S., she didn’t know if she would survive the flight, but she cried out to God and said, “Jesus, you’re all I have, and that’s enough for me.”

During the interview, Cooper also repeated the first words Nancy said after being released from isolation:
“To God be the glory.” He asked Jeremy to explain his mom’s faith and how it helped her.

“Mom and Dad are very devout Christians….They just knew that God had called them to serve other people as a way to demonstrate what God had done for them in Christ, and so they went,” Jeremy replied. “And they said, ‘Let’s go and care and love people that are hurting and broken and in need.’ And that’s just been the compelling force of their life.”

Prepared for Ministry

Jeremy was a student at Moody when his parents decided to become missionaries. Brian, a high school senior, accompanied his parents to their first foreign mission field in Quito, Ecuador. While there, Brian met his wife and was exposed to missionary aviation, which he decided to pursue at Moody. Jeremy, a pastoral studies major, completed his internship at the church in Quito. After several years, David and Nancy relocated to Africa, serving with the Rafiki Foundation in Zambia and, since August 2013, with SIM in Liberia, where Ebola has ravaged many families.

Both sons say Moody provided a strong biblical and theological foundation that helped them trust God throughout their mom’s illness. Jeremy recalls the impact of his first missions course at Moody, particularly the book From Jerusalem to Irian Jaya: A Biographical History of Christian Missions by Ruth A. Tucker. “One predominant theme in that book that I distinctly remember is, missionaries do hard things, go to hard places, and sometimes they die for their calling, they die for the Lord.”

Brian, who served with Mission Aviation Fellowship in the Democratic Republic of Congo before becoming an instructor at Moody, says his courses affirmed who the Lord is, “that He is trustworthy, faithful, and sovereign.” A father of three, he adds that being a Christ follower sometimes leads us “to go into places that can be a little uncomfortable and can be a challenge to work in. We can be Christ-like here, but sometimes we’re also called to be Christ-like and minister to those far away.”

Jeremy, who has a wife and two children, agrees. “God sent his Son to an unlovely, poor, broken, sin-diseased people to give Himself for us, and the gospel calls us to do the very same thing.”

But why Ebola? “I think the Lord afflicted Mom and Dr. Brantly with this for the sake of His gospel, so that the world could see a display of people who suffer for the sake of Christ,” says Jeremy.

“Even the hard things in our life, the difficult trials, are intended by God’s good hand for His glory and our good,” he adds. “When we know that about God, we can by his grace endure anything.”

Nancy and David Writebol speak at a press conference at SIM USA following Nancy’s recovery.

THE EPIDEMIC OF CHICAGO VIOLENCE IS BRINGING MOODY AND OTHER BELIEVERS TOGETHER

Prayers of repentance ascend from Daley Plaza in Chicago.
It was a poignant moment in the public square. On Friday, September 5, 2014, more than 800 people—along with a diverse group of pastors, city officials, and Moody leaders and alumni—gathered downtown at Daley Plaza for an event called Pray Chicago.

“We’re seeking God’s peace for the city,” said Elizabeth Koenig MA ’14, while holding a sign representing West Ridge, one of Chicago’s 77 neighborhoods. She was on the planning committee for the noontime event that drew people from the city and suburbs to unite in prayer about the violence that’s claiming many lives.

“When God wants to do a great work in a city or community, He always begins with His own people first,” Erwin Lutzer, pastor of The Moody Church, announced from the platform. Then Mark Jobe BA ’84, MA ’98, founding pastor of the multi-campus New Life Community Church, led the assembly to kneel for a time of repentance—first for personal sins, then for the sins of the church and for the city.

“We grieve with the mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters whose hearts have been inconsolable over the senseless deaths of loved ones,” Jobe prayed. “We repent over the bigotry and racism that have found deep historical roots in the heart of our city.…We repent as your people, and we ask, O mighty God, that you would look upon us as we kneel before you and ask for your mercy.”

For an hour and a half, ministry leaders read Scripture and prayed in the name of Jesus, including Moody President Paul Nyquist, Arloa (Monkemeier ‘75) Sutter, founder of Breakthrough Urban Ministries, and James Ford ’84, pastor of Christ Bible Church. Pastors from embattled communities such as Wayne Gordon of Lawndale Community Church, Corey Brooks of New Beginnings Church, Jackson Crum of Park Community Church, and Michael Allen of Uptown Baptist Church gave testimonies and prayed. Alderman Walter Burnett and city treasurer Stephanie Neely praised the event from the platform. Worship singing was led by Ryan Booker, and small-group prayer times also took place.

Prayer gatherings continued in many of Chicago’s neighborhoods. With a large wooden cross to draw attention, Paco Amador BA ’94, lead pastor of New Life Community Church in Little Village, and fellow pastor Matt DeMateo BA ’03, executive director of New Life Centers... of Chicagoland, prayed with church members and others at the Arch, the busy entry point of Little Village on 26th Street. “We unfortunately have had to bury a few kids in the last few months,” he says. “We’re seeing the impact of violence and realizing that it’s a spiritual issue and that nothing will be changed through our own efforts but only through the power of Christ.”

“Nothing will be changed through our own efforts but only through the power of Christ.”

In West Garfield Park, one of the most violent communities in Chicago, members of Garfield Park Community Worship Center prayed in front of their church Friday night. Several people who saw them joined in or requested prayer. “Pray Chicago or events similar are crucial for our communities,” says the church’s pastor, Martin Coffer. “Our neighbors need to know that the Lord Jesus cares and He is using His church, born-again believers, to pray, show acts of kindness and genuine love toward a hurting generation.”

At sunrise the next morning, New Life Covenant Church, led by Pastor John Hannah, attracted an estimated 6,000 people for a prayer service on 63rd Street Beach.

Getting Serious about Prayer

Fuder says the urgency to pray more deeply for the city was fueled by a rise in violence in 2012 when Chicago led the nation with more than 500 killings. With initial assistance from seminary students in his Community Analysis course, Fuder produced The Chicago Neighborhood Prayer Guide (Moody Publishers), a manual for praying for all 77 neighborhoods (and 221 micro-neighborhoods).

About the same time, Moody Radio launched the One Cry Prayer Summit, which was broadcast live four times in May 2012 and once in November of that year. The One Cry Prayer Summit was repeated in 2013 and garnered Radio Program of the Year from the National Religious Broadcasters.

“We didn’t realize we were dropping a pebble in the pond that’s rippling through Moody Radio and through our listeners,” says Joe Carlson ’85, senior producer at Moody Radio. The One Cry Prayer Summit inspired theology major Drew Mogck ’16 to start The Gathering, an intercessory student prayer group on the Chicago campus.

Meanwhile, Moody Radio began hosting a prayer group in 2012 called the Chicago Leaders Prayer Summit. About 80 pastors, leaders, and youth ministry workers began praying together from neighborhoods throughout the city. In the process, “they grew to love us and we grew to love them,” says Carlson.

When the group met last August, Vance Henry from the Chicago mayor’s office came in with the funeral bulletin of a nine-year-old boy who was recently shot and killed in an alley. “Vance didn’t have to say anything. He just dropped that on the middle of the table,” Dr. Fuder recalls. “That’s why we knew we needed to keep Pray Chicago going.”

Alumni are encouraged to join in praying for Moody, for Chicago, and for the students who minister in local churches and neighborhoods. “We still need the prayers of those who were here for a season, who studied on campus, did a PCM and an internship in some of these same churches and neighborhoods,” Fuder says.
“It’s hard to imagine that places still exist where there are no cars or motorcycles,” says Daren Spence ’00, a Moody Aviation graduate who serves as international chief pilot for New Tribes Mission. “Many of our missionaries could not serve safely without some sort of airplane service. Missionary aviation is still a big need.”

After he graduated with a BS in Missionary Aviation Technology, Spence spent eight years flying in the Asia-Pacific region, a deliberately ambiguous location name that missionaries use when flying under the political radar. His typical day was full of challenges—perhaps a medical evacuation, disaster relief delivery, transport for a Bible translator, or shuttling a missionary family to the remote village where they serve.

Spence lives between worlds: “In one day we would fly from a big sprawling city of half a million, arriving at a village where the government does not supply electricity. Maybe a generator or solar panels, at best.”

The contrast is even more abrupt as missionaries adapt high-tech ideas to the familiar “jungle pilot” story. “People have that old picture of Nate Saint in their heads, working out of a primitive hut and village. But now the missionary pilots live in a larger city with electricity,

Fuel is an issue since old-style aviation gasoline has become expensive and difficult to find, and is becoming obsolete compared to the more common jet fuel. Meanwhile, cockpit technology changed from the round analog gauges to sophisticated digital screens. As a result, mission agencies are replacing their 1960s-era Cessna planes with a new generation of turbine-powered airplanes like the Quest Kodiak, the new favorite of missionary and humanitarian organizations.

Though missionary pilots work from urban airports, they head to regions where they still build their own airstrip before landing the first flight. By the time pilots and mechanics graduate from Moody’s Missionary Aviation Technology program, they have “the right stuff” of test pilots and combat veterans—but their technical skills are melded with a compassionate, pioneering spirit.

Imagine landing a Quest Kodiak on a grassy airstrip built by 300 volunteers who have never seen an airplane. That’s just what Spence and another Moody graduate, Nathan Tag ’95, did last year on Taliabu Island, 800 miles north of Australia.

Spence describes missionary travel before the airstrip was finished:

www.facebook.com/MoodyAlumniAssociation
After flying from the U.S. to the nearest city with decent air service, they would take a smaller plane to the closest island with a functional airstrip, followed by three days of boat rides to the coast of the destination island. From there they would hitch a ride on the back of a trail bike until they arrived at the final destination.

If their boat engine failed (think large canoe with 40 HP outboard motor), the missionaries might drift for half a day while waiting for a tow. And travel during the four-month cyclone season always led to memorable excursions. Missionaries reported falling out of the boat or off the trail bike at least once a trip—plus a flat tire, maybe a long walk, or even armed robbery.

Spence explains how the new airstrip reduces this four-day trip to a single plane ride, less than two hours. Ever mindful of the travel difficulties, missionaries use a brutally simple formula to describe their outreach to developing nations: No planes = no missionaries.

Moody Aviation, long known for supplying half the world’s missionary pilots, has developed innovative programs to prepare students for the next generation of missionary service. Moody partners with the Spokane Turbine Center, a nonprofit ministry that trains missionaries to fly cutting-edge aircraft with turboprop engines and “glass panel” avionics. The partnership allows Moody to collaborate with groups such as Mission Aviation Fellowship, JAARS, New Tribes Mission, and Samaritan’s Purse.

Moody students train on the world’s only Quest Kodiak flight simulator, a virtual cockpit that displays computer-generated flight scenarios. Students also fly the plane itself, a Quest Kodiak donated by the manufacturer, who has an ongoing mission to support advanced missionary training.

“Moody’s program was very structured, a high level of pilot and mechanical training. We worked on the same planes and equipment that are used all over the world,” Spence says.

He was recently appointed to a new role, international chief pilot for NTM Aviation. He and his family moved to Arizona, where Spence trains pilots, recruits new missionaries, and stays ahead of the rapid changes in aviation.

“I knew God was leading me toward missionary service when I was very young,” Spence says now. “After I graduated from Moody Aviation in 2000, my mother pulled a notebook off her shelf, something I had written in the fourth grade. I said I wanted to be a pilot and fly missionaries to the places where they needed to go.”

And Spence is quick to add a challenge. “Missionary aviation is not a thing of the past. We’re trying to reach out to very remote places, and we still have a big need for pilots.”

A 25-minute evacuation flight delivers a sick young man to a mission hospital; the trip would have taken two days by land.

“Ministry is kind of the family business,” says Jeremy Wood ’96. He and his brother Joel ’99 are both pastors, as is their father, Robert (Bob) Wood ’84, and their uncle, Dan Phillips ’79. Their maternal grandfather, Bernard Horn, also served as a pastor, graduating from Moody in 1949.

The family’s ministry connection with Moody is strong. “I literally cannot remember a time in my life when I didn’t have my heart set on going to Moody,” says Jeremy, who pastors First Congregational Church in Bunker Hill, Illinois.

One of Jeremy’s earliest memories as a young boy is wearing a shirt with the words, “I’m heading for Moody.” When their dad graduated from Moody, Jeremy and Joel posed in their dad’s cap and gown. Their mom, Gloria, and her sister, Kay (Horn ’59) Heath, remember singing as children on Aunt Theresa’s KYB (Know Your Bible) Club program on Moody Radio back in the late ’40s. After she graduated from Moody, Kay did storytelling on the program and was an actress on Moody Radio’s Stories of Great Christians and other programming.

“My cousin’s impression is that we came out of the womb saying ’Moody,” Joel says with a laugh.

Their dad adds a more serious tone when he considers the impact of Moody on his life. “If it hadn’t been for Moody, I don’t know where I or my boys would be today.”

Bob says he spent his first semester in an “extremely liberal college,” where his Bible professor announced that parts of the Bible were uninspired and claimed the apostle Paul was a male chauvinist whose writings weren’t useful. Bewildered and discouraged, Bob went home to Lima, Ohio, where he shared the details with a retired missionary he knew. The missionary told him about students he’d met while in Africa who were from Moody Bible Institute and who believed that the Bible was God’s Word. “Bob,” he said, “if I was a young man again, preparing for ministry, I would look up Moody Bible Institute and do whatever I had to do to become a student there.”

That was the turning point in Bob’s life. Transferring to Moody in 1957, Bob gained assurance of his salvation based on God’s Word and was grateful for the godly life and attitude of men like A. Franklin Broman, who was dean of men, and Dr. Alfred Martin, who was dean of education. Although Bob left Moody after a year, the foundational Bible truths he learned would give him courage as a pastor and lead him back to complete his degree 25 years later.

In 1975, Bob accepted a call to pastor a small church in Ohio after being laid off from a good job at an engine plant. The same day the employer called to apologize for the lay-off due to a clerical error and to offer his old job back, including back pay and benefits. Bob told them he couldn’t come back. “I have a call to preach the gospel,” he said, “and I must preach.”

A few years later, while pastoring the church, he discovered that a hospital supported by his denomination was performing abortions on demand. He preached a message about it and encouraged his leadership to stop sending money to the denomination until the hospital stopped the practice. “Instead they sent a ministerial committee and fired me for disloyalty to their denomination,” Bob says.

Moody-Trained Pastors
When the congregation heard the news on Sunday morning, 78 of the 120 in attendance left the congregation to form a new independent church called Community Bible Church in Arlington, Ohio. Within the first year, they’d put up their first building, and Bob continues to pastor the church to this day.

“That was the home I grew up in,” says Joel, “a home where you have a mom and dad who are willing to stand for the gospel at great sacrifice.”

Joel, who has a doctorate in biblical counseling and is pastor of Sterling Reformed Presbyterian Church in Sterling, Kansas, says Moody instilled in him the same love for the Word that was reinforced at home. He also developed the spiritual discipline of prayer at Moody with other classmates. Both he and Jeremy enjoyed singing in the Moody Chorale and being mentored by then director Gerald Edmonds ’57. One highlight they shared was traveling to the UK for the 50th anniversary of the Chorale, accompanied by Dr. Donald Hustad, director of Moody’s Music Department from 1950 until 1963.

Joel made friends at Moody who are all over the world. When he travels with his wife, Emily, she’s surprised by how often they run into Moody alumni, thus confirming a frequent saying of Moody’s former senior vice president and dean of education, Howard Whaley ’59: “The sun never sets on a Moody grad. We have alums in every time zone.”

Incidentally, before Emily met Joel, he says her understanding of Moody Bible Institute was that “it must be a lousy education if you don’t have to pay anything to go there.” That opinion has been replaced with admiration for the tuition-paid undergraduate education in Chicago. “That aspect was a huge blessing at the time and has become more impressive as we’ve seen how other institutions struggle and strain to provide the little bit of scholarships that they do,” Joel says.

Three generations of the Woods’ extended family have benefited from Moody’s commitment to equip people with the truth of God’s Word and have used their ministry training to help others. Even Bob’s parents, who were not originally in favor of Bob attending Moody, later received Christ as Savior and spent the rest of their lives in faithful Christian service. “I just praise God for Moody,” says Bob. “I don’t think there’s any place else in the world like Moody Bible Institute.”
Christian women don’t have to choose between being sexual and spiritual.

“While Fifty Shades of Grey has changed the sexual landscape for many women, we pray that this book is also a game-changer—bringing hope and healing through the power of God’s truth.” —DR. JULI SLATTERY

Katie Denyes BA ’09 started working with Operation Mobilization in Ireland after three difficult years of losing jobs and struggling with depression. God had been working through different circumstances unknown to Katie and had already placed her on the minds and hearts of some of OM’s directors as a possible leadership candidate for the theatre ministry. Katie is now serving in County Roscommon, Ireland, and is using drama, writing, puppetry, and a host of other skills to communicate the gospel to Irish youth. OM Ireland’s Creative Arts team is currently working on their Christmas show, a three-week tour of churches, schools, and community centers.

Victor Saad BA ’07 started developing an entrepreneurial passion after serving as a youth pastor in a Chicago area church. Inspired by socially minded entrepreneurs and business professionals at a conference, he decided to develop his skills in this area through an MBA program. However, instead of going through a traditional graduate school program, he designed his own self-made learning venture based on apprenticeship and experiential learning that emphasized business, technology, design, and social change. He called the venture The Leap Year Project and invited others to join him. This year of learning, risk-taking, travel, and reflection gave Victor a new vision for higher education. As a result, he wrote a book, started The Experience Institute, and shared his experiences in a TED Talk.

Aaron Lopez BA ’06 is a Radio Communications graduate and second-generation Moody alumnus, following in the footsteps of his father, Danny Lopez BSBS ’92. While at Moody, Aaron met a friend who had a similar passion for the neighborhoods of Chicago. Together, they performed gospel/hip-hop in churches and local venues. Aaron is now working as staff at Grip Outreach for Youth in Chicago, where he shares the life-changing gospel of Jesus Christ with at-risk youth in the city. He also was one of the developers of Streetlights, the first multimedia Bible project that uses audio, video, and other tools to communicate God’s Word.

Dan BA ’00 and Melissa (Martin CEU ’00) Millheim celebrated their 15th wedding anniversary on June 19, 2014. Dan works as the operations manager for Big Town Tickets, a company that buys and sells sports and concert tickets, and Melissa works for the state of Missouri as a child support specialist. They live in St. Louis and attend church at The Journey. Dan and Melissa have three children; Michael (11), Savannah (9), and Benjamin (4).

Matthew BA ’00 and Karen (Obran BA ’01) Huber moved to Ireland in 2008, where they served in youth ministry and church planting with Greater Europe Mission. Last year, Matt took on the role of Dublin City Leader for Serve the City, an international nonprofit organization meeting the practical needs of the vulnerable and marginalized. The Irish branch of Serve the City was founded by another Moody alumnus, Alan McElwee BA ’91. Through their work with GEM and the partnership with Serve the City, they have started engaging with local artists in the creative sphere—Matt as a woodworker, and Karen through creative writing. “Creative artists can have a profound impact on the world for the Kingdom,” says Matt. Matt and Karen live in Dublin with their three children: Jack, Ella, and Asher.

Mark Faus BS ’90 serves as the CEO and general director of the CEML Hospital in southern Angola, Africa, which is funded by Samaritan’s Purse and USAID. Though still a member missionary with Mission Aviation Fellowship Canada, Mark and his family are on loan to the mission hospital, which serves a catchment population of 2.5 million people, half... of whom have no direct access to primary healthcare.

Ed ’86 and Susan Domagal currently reside in Chicago Heights, Ill. Ed is on staff at New Community Church in Dolton, Ill., as the community outreach pastor. Ed and Susan minister to the Riverdale and Englewood neighborhoods in various ways: high-school evangelism, handing out Bibles in the city, and a weekly food program. They also partner with Jubilee Church in St. Louis, Mo., exchanging evangelism teams and constantly seeking partners in evangelism.

Ed thinks that the increasing secularization in our culture and the boldness of atheists around us should become “a powerful catalyst for the Church to be at least as bold for Christ.” He says, “I know it is for me and my ministering brothers and sisters.”

To Jonathan BA ’12 and Alexis [Berry BA ’12] Brubaker, a daughter, Rosalie Mae on Good Friday, April 19, 2014. Jonathan and Alexis were married December 28, 2012, in Pittsburgh with friend Chad Ritchie ’12 officiating. Many alumni friends and family were in attendance, including Jonathan’s parents Jay ’73 and Kathleen (Snyder) Brubaker, a former employee of Moody; uncles Leon Brubaker ’74 and Don Brubaker ’79; and bridesmaid Tamar Karni ’12.

For the past year and a half, they have been working in the Houston real estate market with Alexis’ family. Currently they flip houses and are part-owners and managers of a local real estate training club. With her BA in Communications, Alexis enjoys directing the marketing/writing needs of their real estate businesses. She has scaled back on work, however, and is relishing her new role as homemaker.

Jonathan and Alexis are members of Clear Creek Community Church in League City, Texas, where Alexis is a junior-high small group leader and Jonathan is starting a small group for college-age men. With his BA in Pastoral Studies, Jonathan enjoys serving at their church, which is very active in church planting. The Brubakers hope to make themselves available to their church’s mission as God leads.

Kristen Sauder

A. Kristen (McCall BA ’92) Sauder, age 45, January 22, 2014, Louisville, Ky.

Married to Kurt A. Sauder BA ’91, Kristen served as a pastor’s wife, a mother of four children, an author, speaker, and Bible study leader with Further Still Ministries, which she founded with her husband to equip Christ followers to journey further into the presence of God.

Kristen is survived by her husband and children; parents, Norman McCall and McInerny; two brothers, and a sister.

Marvin was born near Chicago, and when he was 11 the family moved to a dairy farm near Wausau, Wis. Marvin was saved while in the Air Force, and he was discipled by the Navigators on base. He was one of just three Moody Aviation graduates—all mechanics—in 1980, while Moody Aviation changed from a two-year to a three-year program.

Kristen taught people to draw closer to Jesus through her God Seeker Bible studies, her book Trading Panic for Peace (Xulon Press, May 2007), her radio show, and her Excellent Things blog, which her family continues.

Her husband recently wrote a blog praising God for Kristen’s godly life and her love for their children, Olivia Sauder ’11–’13 Mitchell, Drew, Ivy, and Ellie. “She was crazy about her kids and wanted to thoroughly disciple, equip, and prepare them to be disciple makers,” Kurt wrote.

Before she died, Kristen recorded a video for her church family about how she found God faithful in the midst of her cancer. “Because of my faith in Jesus Christ, I have been redeemed. I’ve been set free,” she said.

In honor of her mother, oldest daughter Olivia wore her mother’s wedding dress and married on what would have been Kristen and Kurt’s 23rd wedding anniversary, June 21, 2014.
Marvin Fluger

Marvin and his wife, Sharon, joined the South America Mission and served their Air ministry in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, for almost 20 years.

In 1999 Marvin and Sharon moved to Washington with their son Nathan. Over the years Marvin had worked as an A&P mechanic and was also in charge of facilities maintenance. He spoke often to coworkers about the Lord. Marvin was also an elder at Graham Emmanuel Baptist Church.

In a tribute Nathan wrote, “Dad embodied the best aspects of a man of faith: He was humble, hardworking, respectful, quick to listen, slow to speak, and, most especially, he was selfless.”

Marvin is survived by his wife, Sharon; his son, Nathan; five sisters, Peggy Mueller, Donna Johannes, Sally Westfall, Janell Ludkey, Coreen Schumacher; and two brothers, John, and Paul.
