How to Interview Well
Interviewing

• Get to know the organization inside and out.
• What relates to the job you are seeking? What are they passionate about?
• Put the job description and your resume next to each other and draw lines between job requirements and your resume showing you have experience.
• Draw dotted lines from requirements you haven’t done to resume experiences that are similar and think about how to explain your competence.
Interviewing

• Think through the job description and anticipate questions.
• Bring positive examples to talk about that demonstrate your experience.
• Project yourself into situations that the job description points to and think of examples from your experience.
• If you have not done a requirement specifically, then have a related experience example as a defense.
• Based on your research, have two or three intelligent questions to ask.
Interview Questions

- Behavioral questions ask you to give an example from your life to answer. Past behavior is often a good predictor of future behavior.

- Job Specific Situational questions relate to specific situations that occur with particular jobs. Think through tough situations at a job and have examples of how you positively handled each problem.

- Strengths and Weaknesses questions evaluate your self-awareness. Think through your knowledge-based skills and portable skills (job to job). Think of non-personal weaknesses and talk about them as something you are working to improve.
Interview Types

- Human Resources initial interview.
- Group interview with multiple candidates.
- Group interview with multiple interviewers.
- Departmental one-on-one interview.
HR Interview

• This is the first interview, and it deals the most with your resume and with your cover letter.
• They are looking for how you fit the job description.
• They will go through your resume and ask questions.
• This is where you get to defend the “related” areas of your resume. How well do you know the company? How well do you know the job?
Group Interview

• Your goal is to stand out in a good way so you can get a solo interview.
• This interview style may have multiple candidates and multiple interviewers.
• You may answer typical questions, but you may be given a problem to solve or a work simulation exercise.
• This interview focuses on how you interact with others, demonstrate skills, and solve problems.
Group Interview

• Don’t show surprise at the group format. They may be watching to see who is flexible.
• Resist the urge to introvert, and talk to the others. Then you are seen as a facilitator and a networker, and it demonstrates confidence. Friends can come in handy during the interview.
• Knowing and using the other candidate’s names in one of your responses marks you as a leader. It can help you build off of someone else’s answer and add your follow up idea.
• Include the group in your answering so you involve everyone.
• Be yourself. Don’t interrupt or talk over others, rather speak well when it is your turn.
• You may not be outgoing, but you can do well. When you answer, don’t start with an apology and don’t let your voice trail off. Make original contributions.
• Pay attention, follow the conversation, and lean forward in your seat.
• Remember names to show your engagement in the conversation.
Group Interview

• Try to write down the names and positions of the interviewers, so you can address them by name.
• When answering a question, you need to address and make eye contact with the questioner, but glance at the others every so often to keep them engaged in the conversation.
• Try to remember a specific conversation that you have with each interviewer, so that you can do your thank you notes better.
• Remember to not slouch, but have good posture.
Solo Interview

- This interview will focus mostly on the job and your fit with the rest of the team.
- The interviewer will ask if you have questions. Be prepared and ready to ask intelligent questions about the organization.
- This is also where you can ask clarifying questions about what the job requires.
Phone Interview

• Smile as you talk on the phone, because it will make your voice sound happy and upbeat.
• Sit in a quiet place where you won’t be interrupted, and can have your resume and the job description spread out in front of you
• Try to picture the person you are talking to because that helps you sound better.
• Sit up straight because that also helps you sound better
Video Interview

• Organize your interview space in a quiet, uninterrupted place.
• Test your technology to make sure it works.
• Have a plain wall background, but watch for glare and being back lit.
• Let your camera show you from the waist up.
• Do a practice video interview so that you are comfortable and get feedback.
• Plan for glitches and have a backup plan.
Video Interview

• Test all equipment before the interview begins.
• Dress professionally and test how it looks in the monitor. Plan your attire so that you can see your face clearly on the other person’s screen.
• Watch for back light hiding your face.
• Turn off everything that might distract you.
• Look at the camera not the screen, so you are looking them in the eye.
• Wait a second to respond, in case the connection is weak.
Interview Tips

Interviewing Tips and Advice

• Firm hand shake, not a bone crusher, but not a limp fish.
• Eye contact says you are engaged and trustworthy.
• Being 10-15 minutes early is being on time and being on time is being late.
• Don’t be rude or negative to anyone or about anything.
• Bring about 10 extra copies of your Resume with you.
• Dress appropriately.
• Don’t be negative about anything or anyone.
Thank You Notes

• Handwritten and email thank you notes help you stand out as an excellent candidate.
• Keep track of who you interview with so you can send them a note.
• Notes do not need to be long, but should include a reference to a conversation and one more soft plug for why you are a great candidate.
• Send them the same day as the interview.
